

Five Fashion Tips For Catching Pneumonia

Written by Jonathan Marshall on December 4th, 2015

First year students have finally caught a glimpse of the sordid affair that is Ottawa snowfall. Whether you're from lackadaisical Southern Ontario or an international student braving the unmerciful winter confines of our of gelid terra firma, here's the heads-up on keeping hot while the rest of the world has gone frosty!

1.) Just Jacket Off

Ever picture yourself and a newly met 'friend' grinding up in the club, while wearing that Canada Goose parka your parents knew you'd need? Of course not! If your partner has their hands on you, they're gonna need the skills of the Princess and the Pea if they want to cop a feel. That heavy, unseemly coat looked better on the six sheep it came from, and hides away that stylin' outfit that everyone wants to ogle. Save some cash on coat check and leave it home!

2.) Quit Being The "Square"

Staying up to date on what's in Vogue, Fashion & Cosmo? Good, because you can bet those who divest savings and energy to stay in season are out there being the envy of the scene. Make yourself one of them, and remember that it's always a good time for low-cut dresses and those shorts you got in Grand Bend. Invigorate yourself with indoctrinated gender norms and remember that nothing could be sexier than uncovered knees. Resist the urge to shake, totally not cool.

3.) Burn The Midnight Oil

What is one thing that can a.) Make you look cool b.) Keep you warm, and c.) Support you new government? That's right, smoking! Leave that room full of dancing, sweaty bodies, and move ten feet from the doors. This activity allows you to feel like you're part of a group, because you will literally get hypothermia if you don't find one. Now, we all know smoking tobacco can “alter your lungs”, but you know what that really means? You’re filling one of the largest cavities in your chest with a heated fume, and coating it in one of the best insulators we can produce. The good-will feeling you get from paying the outrageous taxes is compounded by that release of dopamine from satiating your addiction - to being awesome!

4.) It Puts The Lotion On The Skin

Recall our issue with cringe covered knees? Well guess what, this extends to your whole body, your whole, sexy-organ-coated body. It’s not simply a fashion trend, your fellow compatriots have been lusting after your cellular armour since we shed our scales. Show it off when you’re out having fun! You spent thirty minutes doing your hair, why cover it in a toque? If the sweater you wear is hiding your chest, breasts and back, then no one is going to see your fav authors quote, grandmothers name or dream-catcher tattoo! Besides, have you ever noticed that high heels are hella ice treads? Colours are seasonal, fashion is forever.

5.) Let’s Check Under The Hood

Last but not yeast, let’s consider the land down under. It’s a touchy subject, butt instead of clamming up, I’ll risk appearing the dick. Now, while Movember has finished, it’s still no excuse to start growing other forms of curly coverage; no one will call you a SJW for having a snuggle-bush between the thighs. While we are doing away with the unnecessaries, let’s talk long-johns. No one wears them anymore, and thongs are just a way of saying “I’m DTF, but....”. So I say drop ‘em. If you’re out for dinner with a prospective “client”, it doesn’t matter if you’re ordering the salty clam or the meat and two veg, an extra layer to peel off may decide if you’re getting take-out or staying for dessert. Definitely make vigorous use of them during the holiday break, or you’ll find the Rideau won’t be the only canal that freezes this winter. Rock on kids.
