

CUSA Elections: Fountain of Restoring Youth

Written by Adrienne Row-Smith

Bringing out your tantrum child self and school apathy since 1942. Ah, winter has sprung and the students have risen. I wonder what time of the year it is? It's the most wonderful time of the year, CUSA Elections! It is the time of year in which students gussy up, break out their best pettiness coat, and heckle students into establishing them upon the iron throne. It is a short season, and so to ensure that they make the most of this students call upon the greatest gods known to man, the fraternities and Sororities. Relying upon these Hellenic forces, student elects are able to canvass vast students and share their differing coloured Kool-Aid with everyone!

This fantastic period of time does amazing things for the body as NASA (Not Actually Science Association) has found. Sarah Palin, President of NASA, promotes CUSA elections as a cathartic method in which students can let loose and reclaim their inner child. NASA has found that an annual dose of this reinvigorates student's minds and bodies, as they re-establish the connection between childish dreams and idolatry with the notion that their degree will get them fulfilling employment. The process that occurs is wildly scientific and intense, but Palin broke it down for us;

"When you have these candidates running, you know they are capitalizing off what others have built. So, when they take those inner demons of folk, and put them out on display – with their callouts during debates this acts as a catalyst for the inner child of the students to come out. They cause the students to revert back to their happiest moments as children, becoming wildly engrossed in not understanding what is going on, and simply making noise for no apparent reason. This is important to debates, because the candidates need to keep up the misunderstanding in order for themselves to become childish. Therefore, the work that they do is tirelessly invigorating the potential for the foundation of childish youth to occur."

With this shocking revelation, Palin stated it comes as to no surprise as to why students leading up to and during elections become so apathetic, as they cannot fully grasp the health benefits of elections. In other words, elections are good for you, not because they will maybe give students an executive body that will work for them. Instead, elections are important because they allow for children to walk among the university and revitalize their hopeless dreams for a career.
