

The Spookiest Costumes This Hallows' Eve

By: Jonathan Marshall on October 31

The results are in! Your favourite satirical newsletter held a costume contest to determine who was the scariest character of the year. It was a hell of a party, but we managed to sort out the weenies and reward those that entreated us...anyways, here's The Hallowed Hog's Halloween Line-up!

For solo costumes, we had some crazy last-minute showings, and a fair bit of mistaken identity. We had 20 different Slim Shady's show up, and a fight broke out in trying to determine the "realest", when he was found he was arrested for doing wheelies in the parking lot screaming "I don't give a <Hallowed>!" Former Prime Minister Stephen Harper made an appearance, and had we known it was actually him, we would have given him more than runner-up.

In the end, it was the Herpes Simplex Virus that took the trophy, because dammit that's what university students should be most afraid of. Wrap up or pack up kids. Elsa from Frozen took second place, but she ended up crying and storming out of the room because she just couldn't let it go.

In the group costume category we had some cold-hearted humour and tragic events develop, but the winner blew us away! At first we were tempted to award it to a rendition of the Spice Girls which was totally on fleek. However, after further investigation of Baby, Scary, Sporty, Posh and Paprika, we decided to disqualify.

We were expecting to receive a wonderful display of make-up, high-tier fabric design and even a musical ensemble from a group who dressed as the dispatched cast from Game of Thrones. Unfortunately, they're bus was hit by a drunk driver and every single one of them survived. As this was not canon, we were forced to disqualify also.

Disheartened, we were ready to pack up for the night, but the door was kicked open and in came the best group we could have contracted. In front of us was T-Swift's "Bad Blood" squad; Lupus, Anemia, Malaria and Lymphoma, dressed in a very sexy manner I might add. We awarded them first prize and spent the rest of the night with them and the solo winner for some good-ol infectious fun. Till next year, don't stop trickin!
