

According to sources, local man could coach team better than professionals

Written by Seamus DeShill on December 5, 2015

The Senators logo, one of the teams Thompson plans to coach this season.

Local man is said to be the next great coach for Ottawa's local team. Hallowed Hog reporters have discovered a grass roots movement taking place in Northern Ottawa, the activists are hoping to replace the head coach of local sports team with local construction foreman Andrew "Andy" Thompson.

Local speculation is that Thompson could have done a much better job leading the local team to victory in last weeks' sports event.

When questioned about the possibility of Thompson assuming coaching responsibility his wife, Mrs. Thompson had supportive words to say.

"Well I'd say Andy spends enough time on that couch watching that darn TV that I'm sure he could," Mrs. Thompson said.

Liam, Thompson's 7-year-old son was overheard saying encouraging his father.

"Daddy could play professional quarterback if he hadn't hurt his knee in the big game and coach had left him on the field so I know he'd be the best coach ever! I love him," Liam said.

Last seen yelling at his TV, the speculation is that Thompson "normally not one to boast" could have "done way better than that idiot" in leading the team to victory over the opposing team.

As man of many talents it's been suggested that Mr. Thompson could even play most positions on the field better than the professionals, if the local team manages to acquire his talent it could be a huge boon for the franchise.